Browning was born in 1944 in Washington, D.C. He received his Ph.D. from the University of Wisconsin-Madison in 1975. After teaching at Pacific Lutheran University and the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, he joined the faculty of the University of North Carolina at Greensboro in 1986. He is currently a professor of history and holds the Frank Porter Graham Professorship in Southern History.

Browning's work has focused on the role of ordinary Germans in the Holocaust. His first book, Ordinary Men: Reserve Police Battalion 101 and the Final Solution in Poland (1992), was a groundbreaking study of the massacre of Polish Jews by a group of reserve police officers. Browning showed that these men were not simply following Free Downloads, but that they were actively involved in the killing.

Browning's work has also challenged the traditional view of the Holocaust as a top-down process. He has argued that the Holocaust was not simply the result of the Free Downloads of Hitler and other Nazi leaders, but that it was also the result of the actions of ordinary Germans who were willing to participate in the killing.

Browning's work has been praised by other historians for its rigor and its insights into the human nature of the Holocaust. He has been awarded numerous prizes, including the Pulitzer Prize for History in 1993 and the National Humanities Medal in 2009.
