The siege began on March 29, 1780, when the British fleet arrived off the coast of Charleston. The city was defended by a garrison of American troops under the command of General Benjamin Lincoln. The British forces were commanded by General Henry Clinton.

The siege lasted for two months. During that time, the British forces bombarded the city with artillery fire. The Americans fought back bravely, but they were outgunned and outmanned. On May 12, 1780, the Americans surrendered.

The Siege of Charleston was a major defeat for the American cause. It gave the British control of the South, and it led to the capture of General George Washington. However, the siege also showed the resilience of the American people. The Americans fought bravely against a superior enemy, and they never gave up hope.

Gallant Defense: The Siege of Charleston 1780 is a well-written and informative account of a pivotal event in the American Revolutionary War. Weir tells the story from both the American and British perspectives, and he does a good job of capturing the drama and excitement of the siege.
