Growing up in a family overshadowed by divorce, [Author's Name] often felt like an outsider, a silent observer to the chaos that engulfed her home. Her parents, once deeply in love, had become strangers, their marriage collapsing under the weight of unspoken resentments and unfulfilled dreams. As the cracks in their union widened, so too did the fissures in their family.

[Author's Name] candidly recounts the emotional turmoil she endured, torn between her love for both her parents and the realization that their marriage was beyond repair.
