Doe's journey began in 2006, when she traveled to India to volunteer at an orphanage. While there, she met a young girl named Lakshmi who told her about the challenges her family faced. Lakshmi's family lived in a small village and struggled to make ends meet. They owned a few goats, but they were not enough to provide for the family's needs.

Doe was inspired by Lakshmi's story and decided to start a goat-giving program. She partnered with a local organization to Free Download goats and distribute them to families in need. The program was a success, and soon Doe was able to expand her work to other villages.

Today, Doe's program has helped over 10,000 families in India. The goats have provided these families with a source of food, milk, and income. They have also helped to improve the families' health and nutrition.

In her book, Doe shares the stories of some of the families she has helped. She also provides practical advice on how to start a goat-giving program in your own community.

One Woman's Quest to Save the World, One Goat at a Time is a heartwarming and inspiring story. It is a testament to the power of one person to make a difference in the world.
