This book presents a vision of adult education as a transformative practice that can empower learners to challenge injustice and build a more just world. It draws on critical pedagogy, feminist theory, and postcolonial theory to develop a theory of radical adult education that is grounded in the experiences of marginalized communities.

The book is divided into three parts. The first part explores the theoretical foundations of radical adult education. The second part presents case studies of radical adult education programs from around the world. The third part discusses the challenges and opportunities for radical adult education in the 21st century.

Radicalizing Learning is a timely and important book that offers a powerful vision for the future of adult education. It is a must-read for anyone who is committed to social justice and transformative education.
