Excerpt

The following is an excerpt from the book:

“The Roman transliteration of verses is a complex system that has been used for centuries to represent the sounds of the Hebrew and Greek languages in Latin script. There are a number of different methods of transliteration, each with its own advantages and disadvantages.

The most common method of transliteration is the traditional method, which was developed by the early Christian scholars. This method is based on the pronunciation of the Hebrew and Greek languages in the late Roman period.

Another method of transliteration is the scientific method, which was developed by the German philologist Franz Boll in the 19th century. This method is based on the historical pronunciation of the Hebrew and Greek languages.”
