In the heart of downtown Los Angeles, at a humble storefront on Azusa Street, a spiritual fire ignited that would forever alter the course of Christian history. In 1906, William Joseph Seymour, an African American preacher, led a group of believers in a series of prayer meetings that became the birthplace of the Azusa Street Revival.

Seymour, a former Methodist minister, had traveled to Los Angeles seeking healing for his ailing body. He encountered a group of Holiness believers who shared his belief in the imminent outpouring of the Holy Spirit. Inspired by the accounts of the apostolic era, they gathered in an abandoned stable on Bonnie Brae Street, the initial venue for the revival meetings.

As the prayer meetings intensified, a sense of anticipation filled the air. On April 9, 1906, while Seymour preached on the baptism of the Holy Spirit, something extraordinary occurred. This extraordinary event signaled the start of a powerful outpouring of the Holy Spirit that transformed the lives of those present.

The revival meetings quickly gained momentum, attracting people from diverse backgrounds and denominations.
