

The Legions: Exposing the Dark History of Hitler's SS Wiking and SS Nordland Legions

Unveiling the Origins:

The SS Wiking and SS Nordland Legions emerged during the tumultuous years of World War II. The Wiking Legion, initially known as the SS Volunteer Legion Nordland, was formed in 1940 from Scandinavian volunteers, primarily from Denmark, Norway, and Sweden. Its counterpart, the Nordland Legion, was established in 1943 from German settlers residing in occupied Norway. Both legions were part of the Waffen-SS, the combat branch of the Nazi Party's Schutzstaffel (SS).

Ideological Motivation:

The volunteers who joined the SS Wiking and SS Nordland Legions were driven by a complex mix of motives. Some were ardent Nazi sympathizers, lured by the regime's promises of a new world Free Download. Others were motivated by a sense of adventure or a desire to fight against communism. Scandinavians, in particular, were drawn to the Wiking Legion's appeal of fighting for their Germanic heritage.

The Bloody Battlefields:

The SS Wiking and SS Nordland Legions saw extensive combat during the war. The Wiking Legion fought on the Eastern Front, participating in the brutal Siege of Leningrad and the Battle of Kursk. The Nordland Legion fought on both the Eastern and Western Fronts, including the D-Day landings in Normandy and the bitter fighting in the Arctic.

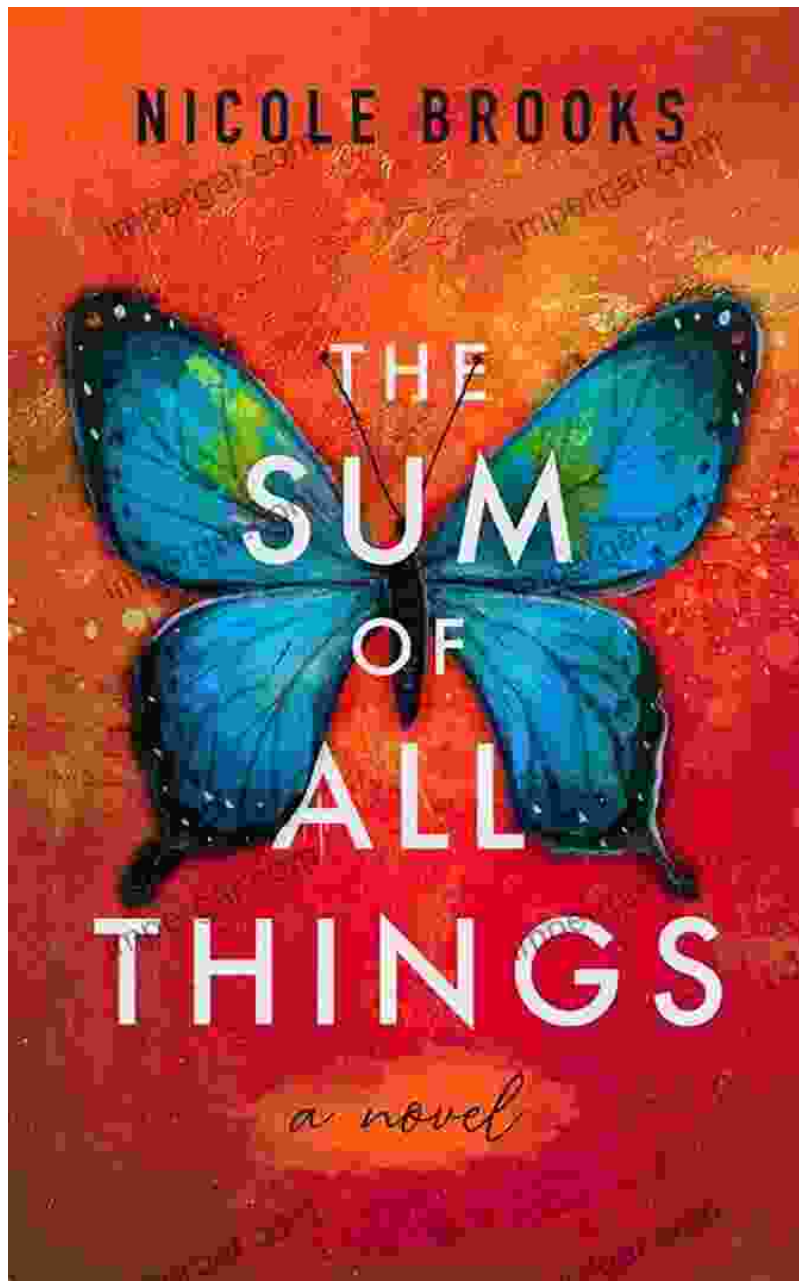

Controversial Legacy:

The legacy of the SS Wiking and SS Nordland Legions remains a subject of debate. While some view them as brave and skilled soldiers, others condemn them for their association with the Nazi regime and its atrocities.

The presence of foreign volunteers in these units raises questions about the extent of support for Nazi ideology beyond Germany's borders. Free Downloads.
