From learning to hunt and fish to dealing with the challenges of extreme weather, Rice's stories are a testament to the human spirit. But they're also laugh-out-loud funny, as Rice recounts his misadventures with a cast of unforgettable characters, including his eccentric family, his loyal dog, and a particularly stubborn reindeer.

Rice's writing is honest, insightful, and full of humor. He writes about the challenges of growing up in a place where the nearest town is hundreds of miles away and the only source of entertainment is the aurora borealis. But he also writes about the beauty of the tundra, the importance of family, and the power of laughter.
