The Dawn of Writing and the Epic of Gilgamesh

One of the most significant contributions of Mesopotamian civilization was the development of writing. The Sumerians, who inhabited Mesopotamia from around 3500 BC, devised the cuneiform script, an intricate system of wedge-shaped markings. Mesopotamian architecture was remarkable for its grandeur and innovation. The ziggurats, towering stepped pyramids, served as religious centers and were believed to connect the heavens and the earth. Royal palaces, such as the magnificent palace of Sargon II in Dur-Sharrukin, showcased the wealth and power of the ruling elites.

Agriculture and Irrigation: The Fertile Crescent

The fertile lands of Mesopotamia, known as the Fertile Crescent, provided sustenance to its inhabitants. This agricultural surplus supported the growth of cities and the emergence of complex societies.
